the Commission on Accreditation of Rehabilitation Facilities for its community employment services.

This is the fifth consecutive accreditation from the commission, and assures the agency is meeting the highest quality standards and best practices in employment services for those with developmental disabilities, according to the announcement.

The nonprofit Lillie Rice Center, 2616 Isaacs Ave., provides employment support, job development and employment planning services for its clients.

Organizations that receive the three-year CARF accreditation demonstrate during on-site visits commitment to programs and services that are measurable, accountable and high quality. CARF is an independent nonprofit accrediting body aimed at quality, value and optimal service outcomes.
